Seattle, Washington — January 20, 2010 — Aronson Security Group (ASG), a premier integrator of enterprise security solutions, will be returning to Seattle's Bell Harbor International Conference Center on March 9th 2010 to host the 9th annual ASG Security Summit & Expo. This year's summit will explore "The Great Conversation: What is everyone talking about?" by bringing together more than 300 security integrators, manufacturers, consultants, and end users to join in a collaborative conversation around physical security and the industry's greatest challenges and successes.

"Last year's event drew a record number of attendees and participants," said Phil Aronson, CEO of Aronson Security Group. "Every year we receive overwhelming praise about how valuable this event is to our participants and how the conversations that take place here continue to create change in the industry."

ASG will be bringing together industry thought leaders such as Francis D'Addario, Emeritus Faculty of the Security Executive Council; Rob McKenna, Attorney General of Washington State; and Mike Howard, General Manager of Microsoft Global Security who will be speaking on the main stage. Additional breakout sessions will take place where the theories espoused by these leaders are manifested in actual case studies which help guide security executives and their teams in implementing the ideas and strategies that create the future of security.

"The Summit is where theory and practice converge," said Aronson. "This year's event will include a panel where we can bring together some of the best minds in the industry to speak with and directly answer the questions of our attendees."
